Not to Blame Because She Had a Soprano Voice.

There was an exciting scene one day last week in an Austin court. The neighbors of Gabe Snodgrass, living on Austin avenue, were compelled to have him arrested. He had whipped his wife, and her screams were so terrific that a crowd at a saloon ten blocks distant put their untouchable glasses back on the bar and went to see what was the matter. Both Gabe and his wife were in court.

"What do you mean sir," said his Honor, sternly, "by such cruel treatment of her whom you vowed at the altar to love and cherish?"

Gabe assumed a persuasive attitude and emphasized every word he said by the most extravagant gestures. He was laboring under the most intense mental excitement.

"I'll explain it ter yer judge. Foah God, I hardly teched her wid the toe ob my boot. I tell yer Judge, dat nigger's voice am ter blame. When she sings hit sounds like a hull camp meetin'. Am I to blame because Matilda has got a voice like a biler explodin'?"

His Honor shook his head, as if to intimate the theory was too thin. "Yer don't believe me? Now Judge you jest judge for yourself," said Gabe, and lifting up a hoof the size of a ham, he gave Matilda a kick that would have jolted an elephant. She threw up her hand and opened her mouth as big as that of a circus hippopotamus. She gave a prolonged yell that caused two teams to run away, and made every body in the court-room hold their ears.

"Dah," said Gabe triumphantly when she subsided, is yer gwine ter punish me because she has got a soprano voice? Is I ter blame because she make a prima donna outen herself?"

His Honor dismissed the case.—Texas Siftings.

A Nevada Cowboy.

Scene—Strawberry festival; portly merchant dancing quadrille with good-looking young lady. Enter Carson-River cowboy just as caller cries, "Grand right and left." Cowboy stands up, and at end of change finds himself standing with portly merchant's partner. Portly merchant unceremoniously crowds cowboy out of his place. Cowboy stands back and deliberately sizes up portly merchant. Comes to conclusion that portly merchant would be too much for him at close quarters. Cowboy throws his son-brero on the floor, hitches up his pants, thrusts his right hand into the rear pocket thereof, and in a radio voice thus delivers himself. Partly I corralled that heifer. She are a maverick; leasewise you hain't got no rope on her. Now I jest reek on I'll gallop with her durin' the balance of this 'ere round up. Light out or I'll set my old forty-five a barkin'." Portly gentleman concludes that discretion is the better part of valor and sits down. Music starts up and cowboy finishes the "galop" with the heifer of his choice.—Ex.

Important to Cattle Shippers.

Judge Kregel in the United States Circuit Court at Kansas City has rendered a decision of importance to cattle men. The case was one in which Charles B. Hudson had shipped 378 steers from Bennington, Kas with orders to have them in the Kansas City stock yards the next day in the time for the markets. The Union Pacific railroad guaranteed to do this, but failed to comply with the contract, and the cattle were sold the next day, when the market was dull, at a loss of $766. Hudson sued and recovered the money. Judge Kregel's decision to-day was in the form of a refusal to grant a motion for a new trial.

Young wife at dinner table, sobbing—"I think you—you—are just as mean as—as you can be. I made that—that apple dumpling as a pleasant surprise for you—and—and you—you—want me to bring a hand saw to cut it in two with."

Young husband—"Good heavens, Maria! Is that a dumpling? I took it for a cocoon!" (With desperate firmness) "I'll eat it now, Maria, if it kills me."—Chicago Tribune.

The Wrong Hang.

"Guess you hung up your stocking last night," said the Sergeant to a drunken man who was being registered.

"No, zur. That's where all the trouble comes in I made a mistake."

SUNDAY SMILES.

"And you love me, darling," he said passionately, "and will always be glad to see me!" "Yes George," she replied, tenderly, "I love you but while coal is up at $18 a ton and this weather holds I think it will be safer for you to stay away."

Mr. Preferred Redding—Now Baxter, that I've fixed all the rest, if you'll drive to Simpson's I'd like to remember you and the cook a little. I've got one shirt-stud left, but it looks bad to leave too much in one place, you know. I'm going to petition to have Christmas come twice a year. It make things so nice and lively.—Patterson Press.

"Great fake this half-shell business ain't it?" grunted the commercial traveler, as he surveyed his plate of oysters. "Here's three little oysters on one half-shell, waiter!" The waiter grinned and suggested, "triplets," but the head waiter, who was called on for an explanation, said, seriously, "I guess they hadn't any more shells in the kitchen."—Buffalo Courier.

A Profitable Ham.

"John, have you charged that ham?" asked a grocer of his clerk a few mornings since.

"What ham?" was the question in answer.

"The ham that was sold about ten minutes ago."

"I did not know that a ham had been sold. I did not sell any."

"Well, I did, and I don't remember to whom I sold it. Do you not remember?"

"This is the first I knew of any ham being sold."

The grocer thought he had lost the price of the ham. Not so with the clerk. He looked over the list of orders, and tried to remember the persons who had been in the store that morning. Then he charged the ham to every one of these persons. Seven teen in all.

"Sixteen of these will kick," remarked the clerk, "and the seventeenth is the man who got the ham."

"The proprietor raised the clerk's wages, and took a drink."

Both anxiously watched the result. Of the seventeen persons to whom the ham had been charged just four did the kicking act; the rest paid their bills without further inquiry, so the grocer got paid their ten times for him.

Seemingly Silenced.

"When I am gone, oh! think of me," wailed a serenader over and over again under the window of a Calumet avenue house the other night. After he had said it for the fifteenth time a fat and furious, red face appeared at an upper window, and a masculine voice hissed out:

"Yes'm, young man, I will remember you and you'll remember me for a long time after you're gone, if you don't put out in less'n three seconds! I've got an old horse pistol up here with a pound and a half of cold lead in it that I'll give you as a memento of me if you don't stop tootin' and bawlin' under the window at an hour when decent folks are abed. Now you go home."

With fair treatment a good, well-made rawhide rope will last from two to five years, and hold any steer that ever drank alkali, besides being of perfect balance for throwing, and easier on hands or saddle horn. Twenty-five to thirty-five feet is the length of the average saw-tooth rope, but such a rope is practically useless for range work, although good in a corral for calf roping.

Every stock hand should aim to thoroughly understand his business, and perfect himself in every part, as roping is a part and an important one of the cowboy's business, and yet many how times is time wasted and work botched and bungled that a little more familiarity with the science of roping would have saved.

I know wages are low and the inducements offered by cattlemen are few for the hands to use, but the man who perfects himself in details, is the one that some day is perfected by these very details. "He who is faithful in a few things shall be ruler over many."—Herald in Pueblo Review.
